THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Howdy all you Pistolaros, I hope you are enjoying this nice wave of cool weather were enjoying. The February match may be a bit on the cool side if this weather doesn't move out by then.

This next section is about reloading and paying attention to how your gun is performing during a match. The story begins at the Tejas Caballeros December match just before Christmas. For reference I was shooting my Uberti Schofields in 45 Colt. I decided to shoot gunfighter style. As I recall things started alright with me shooting slowly with several misses.

Towards the second half of the match, I thought I had some bad loads as I could see the bullets as they headed for the targets. Anyway, I didn't get around to cleaning the Schofields until after Christmas. Imagine my surprise when I discovered a small problem. If it's not apparent in the photo, the bottom of the barrel is split from the tip of the barrel to about half way back; this is a 5-inch barrel.

It has the classic look of a squib followed up by another round and then causing a catastrophic failure. Now the strange thing about this is I don't know when it happened and nobody else noticed it during the match. The Timer Operator didn't see it, the spotters didn't see it, the guy at the unloading table didn't see it, and I didn't see it. You would expect a catastrophic failure to result in an explosion or something. The only thing I noticed was during the last stage or two I thought I just had some bad reloads. The bullets were hitting the targets but they were going so slow you could see them. They also sounded like typical mouse fart loads. One person commented he saw unburnt powder falling out of my barrel after the last round. That still didn't register with me that I had a gun problem. The one clue I missed was I had no problems with the rifle. Since I use the same loads for the rifle as I do for the revolver, I should have noticed the loads were working just fine in the rifle. I'm sure there's a lesson to be learned in here somewhere and when I figure out what it is I'll let you know.

I'll see you on the firing line, but not with my Schofields anytime soon.

NOTES FROM THE RANGE MASTER.....DOWN RANGE!

I hope you had a fun time on the January match; it was a time to get back to having fun rather than just blasting away at targets for speed. I think I threw everything at you from double bonuses, a swinger, bowling with shotguns, and the “ever-so-popular” runaway stage. Had I set up the can tosser and falling plates, we would have had it all... and we would probably still be out there shooting. For the speed demons out there, don’t worry; I won’t do that again for a while...or will I?

We had 17 shooters including one new shooter who is a firefighter that Totusky Pete brought to set up on Friday. He took us up on our offer to come shoot and I think we may have infected hm with the “cowboy action bug”. Really appreciate these firefighters helping out with setup. Speaking of setup, thanks to the rest of the Wooden Nickel crew comprised of Newt Ritter, Sauk Valley Sam, Latigo Lee, Colonel Colt Winchester, Thunder Mountain, Tabasco Kid, Long John Beard, and Totuskey Pete (and his merry band of firefighters).

As for stats, Beauregard Beard shot the match in 108.07 averaging 0.94 seconds a shot even with all the shenanigans I made him do. Beau shot Stage 5 in 33.44 seconds and that is with having to “stop the stage” 3 times! (Shooter had to pull the ropes to reset the shotgun targets themselves three times for those who weren’t there.) Picosa Kid came in second with 141.31 but the battle for third was between PJ Mugwump (176.50) and Wesley James (194.47). Scores seem far away for a ‘battle’, but had it not been for that pesky swinger - Wesley would have beaten PJ. For some reason Wesley doesn’t like that swinger. Stripping the M&P’s both PJ and Wes averaged 1.5 seconds a shot.

Only had one clean shooter (yours truly), but five shooters were only one miss away (OMA): PJ Mugwump, Totuskey Pete, Silver Dollar Sage, Latigo Lee, and the match winner Beauregard Beard on the last stage! Six shooters shot the swinger clean: Beauregard Beard, Newt Ritter, Totuskey Pete, Silver Dollar Sage, Canyon Jim and myself. Four shooters took the double bonus on Stage 4: Newt Ritter, Totuskey Pete, Latigo Lee, and myself. I don’t think anyone took out the 6 bowling with shotgun targets on Stage 3 with less than 4 shots.

Reminder that 31 January is a Fifth Saturday shoot. We are not planning a WBAS/CAS club match that day; it will be a practice day. THERE WILL NOT BE ANY SETUP ON FRIDAY! Saturday, I plan to have a WBAS type stage on one of the lanes and set up a rifle target in Stage 1 so you can sight in Cody Dixon Rifles that many of us only shoot once or twice a year. If you would like to chronograph your loads, I will set up a chrono in one bay. I can even set up some close in targets for derringer and pocket pistol if you want. For those planning on shooting Whoopin' and Comancheria Days, here's your chance to check out your stuff. Don't worry about dressing up in cowboy clothes; come as you are.

I will see you all on the February 7th for the next main match shoot and I promise not to do crazy stuff or at least make it off the clock! Set up will be on February 6th .

'Nough said...brass is up, targets are up, shooter up. Stand by:'. BEEP – BANG – I – BANG – REALLY – BANG – DON'T – BANG – LIKE – BANG – THIS – BANG – #&!*$^%#! – BANG – SWINGER!

The Bean Pot.....

No, not those Hatfields, the other Hatfields!

In the early 1900's, San Diego, California was in the midst of what we now call an "Exceptional Drought." With the thought that rain would return to southern California eventually, the city undertook the construction of the Morena Dam located some sixty miles from the city in the Cuyamaca Mountains.

By the time the dam construction had been completed, the meager lake one hundred yards behind the new dam was nothing more than a marshy meadow. By 1912, the water shortage in San Diego had become acute. In that year, a real estate agent named F. A. Binney and a delegation from the San Diego Wide Awake Improvement Club approached the city council with a possible solution.

It was proposed that the city hire Charles M. Hatfield to come to the area and produce a little rain. Hatfield had become known as a "rainmaker" of no small reputation. While the city council doubted Hatfield's rainmaking talents were sufficient to the task, Binney took it upon himself to offer $10,000 if Hatfield could produce enough rain to fill the Morena Dam reservoir.

Charles Hatfield was not a full-time rainmaker, instead making a living selling sewing machines across California. He and his brother, Paul, lived in the smalltown of Vista in San Diego County. To demonstrate his rainmaking abilities to the local skeptics, the Hatfields built a platform on their farm, installed a small windmill, and assembled Charles' secret chemical cocktail.

They picked a cloudless day, blew the chemicals into the air, and quickly produced light rain showers in Vista. The skeptics were still not convinced, so the brothers mixed a stronger batch of chemicals, blew that into the air, and produced .64 inches of rain in Vista.

Noting his success, the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce offered Hatfield $1,000 if he could make it rain in Los Angeles. The brothers built a new platform in the Baldwin Hills suburb, launched their chemical concoction into a cloudless Los Angeles sky for four months, and generated a measured eighteen inches of rain. Hatfield got his money. Vista got nary a drop.

After months of rain, the Los Angeles City Council asked Hatfield to cease operations as the tourist trade was suffering from days of rainfall. Hatfield briefly moved on to where his efforts filled a lake in Stanislaus County and a reservoir in Fresno, California. Still, San Diego refused to sign a contract with him.

In December, 1915, a delegation from the Wide Awake Improvement Club appealed to Hatfield to generate some rainfall for San Diego. Hatfield sent a letter to the San Diego City Council wherein he proposed to produce forty inches of rain around Morena Dam at no expense to the city. Hatfield was invited to address the Council. He arrived with a detailed contract.

I will fill Morena Dam to overflowing between now and December 20, 1916 for the sum of $10,000 in default of which I ask no compensation: or I will deliver at Morena Dam thirty inches of rain at no charge, you pay me five hundred dollars per inch from the thirtieth inch to the fiftieth inch, all above fifty inches of rain to be delivered free, on or before the first of June 1916. Or I will discharge forty inches during the next twelve months, free of charge, provided you pay me $1,000 per inch for all between forty and fifty inches, all above the fifty inches free."

The City Council countered with an offer to pay Hatfield a flat fee of $10,000 to fill up Morena Dam. Hatfield, Binney, and the Wide Awake Improvement Club accepted that directive as a contract. The Hatfield brothers got to work. By Friday, June 14th, the rain began falling, so much so that the races at the Aguas Caliente Racetrack had to be cancelled. Tourists once again found other, drier places to be rather than San Diego.

The rains continued. Streams filled. Bridges and houses were washed away towards the Pacific Ocean. Railroad tracks and highways became submerged. Stranded train passengers were rescued by a seagoing launch. A party was sent by horseback to inform the Hatfields that, while the Morena Dam reservoir had yet to be completely filled, San Diego would immediately authorize payment of $10,000 to cease operations. Thirty minutes later, the rain stopped.

And then the lawyers got involved. The rains had caused hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of damage. Should the San Diego City Council actually pay Hatfield what was owed, the City of San Diego would then be liable for the damages. The City Council declined to pay Hatfield $10,000.

Hatfield, still clutching his unaccepted invoice for $10,000, retreated back to his operation near Morena Dam. On January 24th, it began to rain in amounts that made his previous rain totals seem like mere sprinkles. The soaked ground could take no more. Several dams failed, and flash-flooding was taking place virtually everywhere. The railroad parked a string of laden ore cars atop one trestle, only to see the whole affair wash away. Ships in San Diego harbor were swept from their moorings. The last of the homes in the Tia Juana River Valley were swept out to sea. Fourteen people died.

Finally, on January 29th, the Morena Dam reservoir was spilling over the top. Deeming his original contract terms fulfilled, Hatfield ceased operations. He never did get paid for filling the Morena Dam. Years of suit and countersuit eventually ran their course, and by 1938 the courts deem the proceedings a "dead docket."

Charles Hatfield died quietly in Los Angeles in 1952. His obituaries contained no mention of his talent for producing rain. The secret of his rainmaking chemical concoction died with him.

DENVER'S FIRST TRIAL

*Six Cans of Oysters
Denver's First Trial*

When the cry of silver or gold goes out, immediately hundreds and even thousands of people flock to the area. Overnight, the area is dotted with crude structures called homes. And stores, restaurants and the mandatory saloons pop up right along with the homes. What doesn't happen immediately is the town's infrastructure... regulations to insure people are civilized, and a means of enforcement when people aren't civilized.

That's what happened with Denver, Colorado. But, on January 13, 1859, some of the citizens of Denver decided it was time for law and order.

A makeshift court was assembled along the Platte River. The hardened criminal was brought before the court. The man was charged with stealing...six cans of oysters. That's right oysters. They were a delicacy to the miners. And, those six cans were probably the last oysters in town. Besides, they were valued at $30.

He was found guilty. And, since there was no jail in the area, his punishment was 20 lashes. However, there were those who thought he should be hanged.

When they discovered that he was drunk at the time he stole the oysters, and, since most of the jury were probably heavy drinkers themselves, the final verdict was amended. They decided the offender should be banned from the settlement.

However, realizing that the draw of gold might mean that he would sneak back, they added one more caveat to his sentence. That was that if he returned to the village anyone could shoot him on sight.

I understand he was never heard from again.
